ABOUT THE COURSE

Around the world, developing countries are increasingly recognising the value of social protection programmes in reducing extreme poverty, with success stories in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. The Economic Policy Research Institute (EPRI), together with the UNU-MERIT/Maastricht Graduate School of Governance and the Institute of Development Studies (IDS), is offering a two-week course including a number of specialised modules aimed at providing participants with an in-depth understanding of the conceptual and practical issues involved in the development of social transfer programmes. Participants will acquire tools required for the appropriate identification and successful design and implementation of these programmes.

WHO IS IT FOR?

The course aims to build the capacity of government policymakers and officials, representatives from bilateral and multilateral agencies, programme practitioners and staff members from non-governmental organisations. The course will serve those who want to more effectively design, implement and manage social transfer programmes with the goal of reducing poverty and better achieving the Sustainable Development Goals.

HOW PARTICIPANTS WILL BENEFIT

At the end of these courses, the successful participant will better understand the comprehensive approach to social protection and how appropriate cash transfer instruments can reduce poverty and vulnerability and promote developmental outcomes. These courses will reinforce the skills required to identify, design and implement effective social protection programmes. A team of international experts, skilled professionals and leaders in the field will teach the course. The certificated course will be jointly accredited by the UNU-MERIT/Maastricht Graduate School of Governance, and the Economic Policy Research Institute.

WHAT THE COURSE WILL COVER

The first five days of the course includes a coordinated series of theme-oriented sessions, practical skills-building workshops, field trips to visit social transfer sites and relevant technical skills training. The course will be taught using formal lectures, practical case studies and hands-on exercises.

Topics will include:

- The role of cash transfers in reducing poverty, vulnerability and social exclusion
- The identification of appropriate social transfer instruments for specific country contexts
- The design of cash transfer programmes
- Implementation issues, including registration, targeting, payment and information systems
- Monitoring and evaluation approaches for social transfer programmes
- Case studies of successful programmes around the world
- Field trips to see South Africa's social transfer system in action

The certified course is jointly accredited by the UNU-MERIT/Maastricht Graduate School of Governance, and the Economic Policy Research Institute.

CHOOSE A SPECIALISATION

During the second week of the course, participants will choose one of several intensive, five-day modules on a specialised topic. Offerings may vary based on demand and enrolment numbers, but typical options include:

SOCIAL PROTECTION POLICY

This module exposes the participants to the policymaking process for social protection. Drawing on case studies and policymaking theory, participants will discuss the different components of policy documents, taking into consideration the political economy, policy-relevant evidence, and other contextual issues. The module equips participants with a framework for developing and analysing social protection policies and lets them view such policies in an international perspective.

FINANCIAL INCLUSION AND ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY: LINKAGES TO SOCIAL PROTECTION

This module provides participants with an in-depth and practical understanding of how new and existing social transfer programmes can be designed and implemented so as to promote livelihoods, increase financial inclusion, and achieve developmental outcomes. The module will detail successful international case studies and this will be applied within an evidence building framework to identify workable approaches for different country contexts.

MONITORING AND EVALUATING SOCIAL PROTECTION

This course offers its participants an in-depth practical understanding of how monitoring and impact assessment can be used to evaluate programme success. Participants will consider alternative monitoring and evaluation designs including quantitative, qualitative and integrated approaches. They will study evidence-building pilots as tools for policy innovation, how evidence from monitoring and evaluation exercises can be communicated to key decision makers to build support for programmes, and the use of technology to improve M&E outcomes.

The specialised modules can be taken as part of the two-week course, or as standalone, advanced topic courses. Graduates of past courses and/or people with extensive social protection experience can elect to attend a specialised module only. For more detail of the specialized modules please visit: <http://epri.org.za/what-we-do/courses/special-topics/>
